

What are the small busbars at the top of the screen

Overview

Snap Bar appears on the top of the screen & lets you arrange opened windows to increase productivity.

Key Takeaways

The small bars at the top of your screen are part of Windows 11's Snap Layouts feature, which helps you quickly arrange and resize windows. What They Are These bars appear when you drag a window toward the top of the screen. They provide visual cues for Snap Layouts, allowing you to choose how to position your window—side by side, stacked, or in other predefined arrangements. The bar disappears as soon as you release the window, which is why it can be difficult to interact with directly or capture in a screenshot .

Purpose

The Snap Layouts feature is designed to enhance multitasking by making it easier to organize multiple windows on your screen. When you hover a window near the top, the small bar shows layout options so you can quickly snap the window into a desired position without manually resizing it .

How to Disable It

If you find the bar distracting or unnecessary, you can turn it off:

- Open Settings.
 - Go to System > Multitasking.
 - Expand Snap windows.
 - Uncheck "Show snap layouts when I drag a window to the top of my screen". After doing this, the small bars will no longer appear when dragging windows .
- Additional Notes
- The bars only appear while dragging a window; they are not permanent UI elements.
 - They are part of Windows 11's built-in window management tools and are not caused by third-party software.
 - If you experience unusual behavior or persistent bars outside of Snap Layouts, it may be related to display drivers or other system settings, but in most cases, it is the Snap Layout feature .
